Kiss the cook

Special to The Sun
Eight blind and visually impaired children had a wonderful time as they cut and peeled vegetables, mixed ingredients for homemade lasagna, coated strawberries and also almonds with warm melted chocolate and, generally, got their hands "dirty" cooking at Joe Palombo's Mirabella Café in Cherry Hill recently. Arranged through The Little Rock Foundation, Cooking without Looking was the first workshop designed to teach blind and visually impaired children the real world experience of cooking. Pictured, are chef Joe Palombo, Jade Captan, 8, and Rocco Fiorentino, 13 (both of Voorhees) and Tina Fiorentino, executive director of The Little Rock Foundation. Because of the children's enthusiasm, Cooking without Looking will become an annual event presented by The Little Rock Foundation.
