Each year, the Helen Keller Award for Independence is presented to a blind or visually impaired individual whose lifestyle reflects a level of independence that sets a standard for others. As an Ambassador for The Little Rock Foundation, Rocco is an educator and activist for the blind, influencing decision-makers about the importance of Braille education and building awareness about living without sight. When he was only 5 years old and eight years old, he spoke to New Jersey State legislators and persuaded them to dedicate a total of $1.2 million to Braille education and services for blind students. In 2008, he spoke at the NJ State Assembly Budget Hearings protesting projected budget cuts and, because of this, he saved the jobs of 50 staff members of the New Jersey Commission for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

Rocco Fiorentino is also an accomplished jazz musician – singer, pianist, drummer and composer who was recently seen on “The Today Show.” His talent is remarkable considering that he was born four months premature and weighed only 1 ½ lbs. He became blind because of the high levels of oxygen needed to keep him alive. Rocco left the hospital six months later, after having 10 surgeries. And, knowing this, it makes it even more incredible that this young man awakes with a smile and doesn’t understand negative thinking.
